How to Make Latin Prose Easier to Read: Techniques for Simplifying Complicated Syntax

Do your students panic when faced with a syntactically complex sentence in prose? Are they unsure even where to start? This webinar will offer some strategies for demystifying Latin prose syntax. Using examples from Caesar's De Bello Gallico and Cicero's Pro Caelio, we will work through strategies that will increase students' confidence in reading Latin prose. Materials for the webinar will be available as downloadable documents in advance from Google Drive.

Monday, October 12, 2015
6:30 p.m. EST

Presenter: Victoria Jordan, who teaches Latin (and sometimes Greek) at the Ellis School in Pittsburgh, spent the summer reading Dante in Sienna as part of an NEH institute. She received her PhD from Boston College with a specialization in the development of Latin in late antiquity and the concomitant emergence of vernacular languages.

This webinar is a project of the National Committee for Latin and Greek. There is no fee for participation; to register contact nclg.chair@gmail.com.
